

Dr. George Stewart

BIO: Dr. Stewart is a renowned Alaskan physician, having practiced pulmonology/critical care in Alaska for 36 years. A native of Massachusetts, he moved to Alaska in 1971 and served as an ardent champion of lung health in Alaska for more than three decades. He was instrumental in getting hospitals to go smoke-free and worked with others to spread the smoke-free culture in all of Alaska. Dr. Stewart retired from medicine in 2005 and is still teaching aviation courses (safety, psychology, ergonomics) in the aviation degree programs at UAA and Embry Riddle Aviation (Tacoma Beach, Prescott and Anchorage). He is also very active in Medical Education International Mission Overseas.

Mission Connection: The American Lung Association in Alaska is proud to have had the honor of having Dr. Stewart on the board for over 24 years. He has been a champion of lung health in Alaska for all of his 36 years here. He was instrumental in promoting smoke-free hospitals and worked with others to spread the smoke-free culture in all of Alaska.
