

“The way in which we have the healthcare of tomorrow is to do research today. We need to tackle those major problems that seem intractable, but will be mitigated by discoveries that we make today. There’s no way to do this research without funding, and the vision that our American Lung Association supporters have to bring together a workforce to tackle these major problems is crucial. There can be no more important work.”

Steven Dubinett, MD, Associate Vice Chancellor for Research, and Professor of Medicine, UCLA
